
Subject: Bad movies

Posted by Anonymous on Wed, 18 Sep 2013 22:10:16 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Originally posted by: @RUTGERS.ARPA:A.ANDY@SU-GSB-HOW.ARPA

Message-ID:

Date: Fri, 8-Feb-85 22:59:35 EST

Article-I.D.: topaz.560

Posted: Fri Feb 8 22:59:35 1985

Date-Received: Sun, 10-Feb-85 06:12:08 EST

Sender: daemon@topaz.ARPA

Organization: Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N.J.

Lines: 42

From: Andrew "VaxBuster" Gideon

Office Phone: (415) 497-4816/9717

[Note: Due to totalitarianism on the part of a certain site, the author of this message cannot send it here herself without suffering the loss of her access to the network(ing) world. As I find this policy personally distasteful, and because I greatly admire and adore the author, I am submitting it on her behalf. In other words, I haven't the slightest notion what she is talking about, and refuse to accept any blame for the psychological damage which may result from reading her work.]

[[If I send mail to SFLOVERS, I would get kicked off the system.

So, could you forward this to the digest WITHOUT ANY NAME ATTACHED TO IT?!?!?]]

As far as these pitiful attempts to find the world's worst SF movie of all time, one movie has been over looked. I am not quite sure of the title, but here is a brief description.

I saw it several years ago on Cable TV, it never even got to the theaters it was so bad. It was on the tail wind of Star Wars and an obvious attempt to cash in on its selling potential. It was about a young hero, who had a link in with some Force-like magic who went around whining. The hero was played by Marjoe Gortner, who many may not remember as a child evangelist. Christopher Plummer had a bit part as the Emperor (I don't know if he was evil or not) and seemed accutely embarrassed throughout the thirty or forty seconds that he appeared on screen. (He got top billing, if I remember correctly).

What really stands out in my mind were the giant amazon robots, which tried to be physically as true to women as possible. i.e. get the idea -- especially around the front upper torso region?

The greatest reason to assume that this may (or may not be) one of the all time worst movies is that it wasn't meant to be bad. This is pretty obvious. Pathetically so.

Subject: Re: Bad movies
Posted by leeper on Wed, 18 Sep 2013 22:10:32 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Message-ID:
Date: Wed, 13-Feb-85 18:16:08 EST
Article-I.D.: ahuta.459
Posted: Wed Feb 13 18:16:08 1985
Date-Received: Thu, 14-Feb-85 02:46:29 EST
References:
Organization: AT&T Information Systems Labs, Holmdel NJ
Lines: 28

REFERENCES:

>As far as these pitiful attempts to find the world's worst >SF movie of all time, one movie has been over looked. I am >not quite sure of the title, but here is a brief description.
>
>I saw it several years ago on Cable TV, it never even got to >the theaters it was so bad. It was on the tail wind of Star >Wars and an obvious attempt to cash in on its selling >potential. It was about a young hero, who had a link >in with some Force-like magic who went around whining. The >hero was played by Marjoe Gortner, who many may not remember >as a child evangelist. Christopher Plummer had a bit part >as the Emperor (I don't know if he was evil or not) and >seemed accutely embarrassed throughout the thirty or forty >seconds that he appeared on screen. (He got top billing, if >I remember correctly).
>

I'm pretty sure someone mentioned it, perhaps in net.movies. You are describing STARCRAH which starred Caroline Munro (as Stella Star) along with Gortner and Plummer. It was directed by Louis Coates (Italian science fiction-fan Luigi Cozzi). It won't win any prizes, but it was well paced and better than literally hundreds of science fiction films.

Mark Leeper
...ihnp4!ahuta!leeper
