What binary files? 6510 binaries? SDL sounds like something you run on your host. You don't run them in VICE.

You should have icons in your start thingy in Windows to launch VICE. Otherwise you might have files like x64.exe which for example launches the C64 emulator. Once launched you can attach a disk/tape/cartridge/... image for the C64 and run it.

No documentation for VICE? Got not only man pages in Linux but also an HTML library somewhere on the hard disk when it got installed. I bet there is also a help button in its Windows version. Then there is Google...

No, you just get the 32bit or 64bit binary version suiting your operating system. SDL is just a different display method. You don't need this
